Palm Springs Aerial Tramway

The city of Palm Springs rests in the shadows of the San Jacinto Mountains. The towering, snow-topped peaks of Southern California's second-highest mountain range are beautiful to behold from the valley floor, but many visitors say that a mountaintop experience is incredible. To reach the summit, you'll take the Palm Springs Aerial Tramway. Once you rise 8,516 feet to the top, you can hike, snowshoe or cross-country ski before heading back down the mountain via a return tram.

To avoid waiting in long ticket lines, several travelers recommend purchasing your tram passes on the attraction's ticket page. If tickets are not available online for your arrival date, you will need to buy them on-site. Adults will be charged $25.95 for standard tram tickets; reduced rates for seniors and children ages 3 to 10 are also offered.

Additional information about opening hours and more can be found on the attraction's website.

The Coachella Valley Preserve may seem like a barren desert, but keep your eyes peeled and you'll see that its 20,000-plus acres are more than just sand and brush. The preserve encompasses the smaller Thousand Palms Oasis preserve, which boasts more than 25 miles of hiking paths. Along the trails you'll spot rare wildlife, lush palm woodland oases and desert wetlands, which at different times of the year blossom with wildflowers. And if you visit between October and March, consider joining one of the preserve's free guided hikes. The Coachella Valley Preserve is located about 17 miles east of Palm Springs in the town of Thousand Palms. The visitors center is generally open every day between September and May from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., but because it is staffed by volunteers with varying schedules, opening hours are subject to change. 29200 Thousand Palms Canyon Road, Thousand Palms, CA 92276

Joshua Tree National Park is an oasis in the center of the desert. From Hidden Valley (which features a nice, easy hike) to the Cholla Cactus Garden (home to many a photo op at sunset), Joshua Tree caters to a variety of active travelers. Meanwhile, with its perch in the Little San Bernardino Mountains, the Keyes View lookout is another great place for a spectacular view of the Coachella Valley.

Whether you're planning on hiking or just driving through, the park rangers recommend bringing plenty of water ó this is the desert, after all. What's more, recent travelers suggested bringing food to enjoy at one of Hidden Valley's picnic tables.

Joshua Tree National Park is open 24 hours a day, but the different nature and visitors centers have different hours of operation. You'll find the park less than 40 miles east of Palm Springs, accessible through the Twentynine Palms entrance. For more information, visit the Joshua Tree National Park website. 74485 National Park Drive, Twentynine Palms, CA 92277
